

“Oscar & Felix ~ A New Look At The Odd Couple”
At the
Riverside Dinner Theatre

Tuesday, May 29, 2012

The return of theatre’s well-known “frenemies” is the result of a chance encounter Neil Simon had on his daily drive home in LA. He flipped on the radio and heard something familiar: an acting troupe performing his classic 1965 play. After listening for several minutes, the playwright said to himself, “I can do better,” and began writing. The result was a faster-paced, funnier play . . . that still attempts to answer the question; “Can two grown men share an apartment without driving each other crazy?”

One of the biggest attractions of the Inn today (pictured at the upper left) is its charm of yesterday. It is situated picturesquely on the banks of French Creek and has been in continuous operation since 1885. It was built to accommodate wealthy patrons during the exciting “mineral water boom” of the late 1800’s and early 1900’s.
